Inferences and Conclusions

At the Hedges Again

My mother's voice screeched into the house from the yard. Up in my room, I thought a storm had come until I saw the bare windowpane with the butter-colored sun streaming in.

I ran down the wooden steps and out the front door, peered through the railings on the front porch. My father was out by the hedges again, clipping as if some devil had possessed him, sweat streaming down his face and the shears sprouting from his giant body like antlers. For two days now, all we'd heard were the sounds of metal

1. What most likely happened when the father went to the market two days ago?

- A He learned how to trim hedges.
- B He lost the basket of eggs he bought.
- C He fell under the spell of Mary Finn.
- D He bought a new set of hedge clippers.
